

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Indiana's "no-call" law has allowed my family to enjoy the little time we have to relax in our home. We have been able to eat dinner without being interrupted by annoying telemarketing calls. Before Indiana implemented it's "no-call" law we received multiple calls from a variety of companies including credit card companies, phone companies, newspaper publishers, and paid solicitors collecting donations on behalf of dozens of different charities. The latter were the worst. It got so bad that we finally stopped answering our phone. It's pretty bad when you pay $50+ per month and can't even answer your own telephone! Since we put our name and telephone number on the list, the number of calls we receive has dropped dramatically! We are finally able to answer our telephone without being afraid the caller will be asking us for something. It is my firm belief that all states should have a similar law and the the FCC should leave Indiana's already effective law ALONE.
